The General Data Protection Regulation

What's GDPR

As many of you already know, May 25th will be a crucial date for every marketer, enterprise, blogger who uses or manages personal data. In that day, the General Data Protection Regulation (GDPR) will enter into application and it will introduce some substantial changes to the way we are used to treat personal data until now.

Region Security Guarding and GDPR: Should i be afraid?

Of course not! Region Security Guarding always held in the highest respect the privacy of users' personal data, offering the right tools to manage them in a simple way, from the collection of consent to the deletion of obsolete data. Anyway, with the GDPR, some more steps were required. In the last few months we worked hard to improve Region Security Guarding with the necessary tools to obtain a full compliance with the new regulation. And yes, we focused on keeping things simple at the same time.

Why security staff could soon be guarding police crime scenes?

Private security staff are set to guard crime scenes in the West Midlands under an initiative designed to free up police officers for catching criminals.

With more than 2,000 police officers cut since 2010 and further cuts ahead police bosses believe having them standing by sealed off crime scenes for hours on end is a waste of resources.

They are also looking to cut the amount of time constables spend guarding prisoners and suspects in hospital.

Constables guard streets and locations where violent crime and murders have taken place to prevent contamination or removal of evidence, or prevent forensics teams being interrupted by passers-by.

Bosses say this is a job which could be done easily by cheaper security guards.
